SUMMER STUDIES

by

Bob Merriam

As part of their professional development a number of the faculty took advantage of the summer to study or attend workshops that will be beneficial to themselves and their students.

Margaret Howland, Bernard Drabek, George Bluh and Richard Wizansky were invited to attend the first New England Studies Institute at Dartmouth. The Institute, sponsored by Dartmouth and the National Endowment for the Humanities, offered a core curriculum of four courses. In addition each of the participants worked on special projects related to curriculum development in regional studies: in this case, the Pioneer Valley Studies curriculum. Pegge prepared material for a course on the History of Pioneer Valley Education, Ben on the MacLeish Seminar, George on Valley Ethnic History, and Richard on a history of theatre in the Valley.

Wil Roberts attended the Dublin seminar for New England Folklife at which a number of experts discussed the regional influence on such subjects as furniture and the decorative arts, ballads and folk symbols, social and religious history, architecture and economic history, and transportation.

Arthur Shaw was at Oxford, England, for a month studying the influence on Christian thought of the First Council of Nicaea and the philosophy of the minor prophets in the old Testament.

On grants from the Greenfield Community College Foundation, Pamela Sacher-MacLachlan attended a workshop on career development for art majors; David Patrick and Garrett McAuliffe attended a meeting of the American Society for Tutoring and Development; Anne Wiley attended the International Caregiving Institute; Rona Rothenberg a piano workshop in Quebec; Nancy Buchanan the American College Health Association meeting; Norman Muller took data processing courses; Carolyn Nims took courses in teaching English as a Second Language; and Joan Rising took training in art slide curatorship.

NOTES OF INTEREST

Tom Young (Art Department) was awarded a Photography Fellowship Grant in June by the Artists Foundation, Boston, Mass. The Fellowships are funded by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities. The grant allows the chosen artists to continue creating new works. Nine were chosen from 461 applicants for 1981.

Hartley Pfeil (Coordinator of English) returned to the National Seminar for Master Teachers for his third successive summer as a staff member. The Seminar which meets each August at Westbrook College, Portland, Maine, attracts about 80 faculty members from community and junior colleges across the nation. Staff members guide participants in discussions on topics of general concern, especially related to the problems of teaching, and then workshops addressing those topics are developed. Hartley's presentations on "Small Group Discussion as a Teaching Strategy" and on "Locus of Control as a Key to Motivation" were well received.

Saul Greenblatt (Speech Department) and Howard Singer (English Department) have developed a new concept to help people communicate clearly under stress. Human Communications System was formed last February to provide consulting services to business on how to improve communications for persons under stress. Since the formation of the company, the two have conducted programs at 10 companies in New England. They are now writing a book about their new concept that explains why communication breaks down in business organizations.
